The doors of stone are the third novel of The Kingkiller Chronicle series written by American author Patrick Rothfuss. It belongs to the genre of fantasy and is similar to the writing style of George R. R. Martin. According to many, this will be the final book of the series. However, the author who has been at it since 2011 has asked us not to believe any rumors until the book is finally available in the market.

Moreover, the upcoming novel will cover the third day's story as related to Chronicer. At the beginning of the process, Rothfuss admitted that he was not very fond of the title given and wished for it to be a little shorter.

Though no official date has been revealed yet, there were some rumors regarding it that do not hold much credibility.

Next year, I'm not going to publish Doors of Stone. #ResolutionRevolution.

(Sorry, but you might as well start coming to grips with it now.)

If we, however, go according to the news leak, the readers will have access to it by this year's month of August. In one of the podcasts, Rothfuss claimed that the book has been making good progress.

Moreover, there was also news that said that it should have been released last year, but the process got delayed. At this moment, considering the global lockdown due to the widespread Coronavirus pandemic, it will not be a surprise if we witness an even greater delay in the book's release.

Online sites like Amazon, Flipkart, and Book Depositories started the book's pre-booking in the month of August last year (2019). That provision is right now on hold due to the rules of social distancing where these sites are only focussing on delivering essential items to households.

Patrick Rothfuss is an American author best known for his trilogy: The Kingkiller Chronicle, for which he has also received many awards, including the Quill Award in 2007 for its first part. Moreover, the second part of the series topped the Newyork Times Best Seller List.

It seems like we still have a few months before getting to read the third party. Till then, why not re-read the first and the second parts again?

The Zanzibar doors are a key talking point when you visit the island. When you stroll through the crumbling streets of Stone Town, your impression may flit between two trains of thought. Is this a town that's in serious disrepair? Or is this an incredible time capsule of mysterious beauty and faded grandeur?

Personally, I think both are true. In some lights, Stone Town looks sad and beaten. Yet the more you explore, the more you will appreciate its unique character and precious historical quality.

And a lot of that is down to these beautiful doors.

Three centuries on from when Stone Town's historical buildings first emerged, it's been recognised that this UNESCO World Heritage Site needs to be preserved.

The sad news is that the number of original Zanzibar doors is dwindling. Restoration is slow due to lack of funds and apparently, many have been removed.

That said, I witnessed some signs of restoration when I visited Stone Town which is good news for both the people who visit and the Zanzibari locals who live here.

Many of the famed Zanzibar doors represent a time when rich aristocrats on the island thrived off a brutal slave trade, but the beautiful carvings also tell many stories of the Omani Arabic, Indian and Swahili cultures that still exist here.

There's no denying, they're one of the most photographed attractions for travellers to Stone Town. And the restoration programme itself, is helping create jobs for local people.

They've become a hallmark for this intriguing part of East Africa and were one of the sights that captured my attention most while we explored Stone Town's frenetic streets.

What's so interesting about these doors is that their characteristics and detail tell many stories depending on which culture they originate from.

Here's a little explanation...

Zanzibar Doors – the different cultural influences.

Swahili Doors.

The Swahili doors are perhaps the least elaborate, but equally intriguing. I didn't capture many pictures of the Swahili doors to be honest. However, I did snap this example of the colourful doors you'll find in and around Jaws Corner, a photographer's dream.

Indian Doors.

You'll recognise the Indian doors with their arched frames and elaborate brass studs. Some of the Punjabi-influenced doors are also arched at the top.

There are many explanations for why the Indian doors boast those elaborate studs. Some say they derive from a design used in India that stopped the door being damaged by elephants. Another says that the studs are a symbol of wealth – the more studs you have, the more prestigious or wealthy you are.

It's likely, the reason is a combination of the two but these days, of course, the studs are purely aesthetic as there are no elephants in Zanzibar. I love that there's a story behind them though.

Arabic doors.

Physics virtual lab pvl. The Omani Arabic doors can be distinguished by their rectangular shape and intricate carvings, many symbolising inscriptions from the Quran. In a similar way that the brass studs represent wealth in the Indian doors, the more intricate the carvings of the Arabic doors, the more socially 'prestigious' the owners were.

Another characteristic you may spot when you're exploring the streets of Stone Town is that some Zanzibar doors display chain carvings which indicate that the home was occupied by people working in the slave trade. Those in the fishing industry may have had fish carvings on their doors and interestingly, vines symbolise residents who worked in the island's famed spice trade.

There are many other symbols you may pick up on and find out your own stories while you're there.

I tell you what, it makes many of our own front doors look rather dull, doesn't it?!

I do hope the restoration project carries on and these pieces of history continue to be preserved.
